

Announcing the 2017 "iaelyon International Week"

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS

Building on its previous success, iaelyon will be running the 11th year of its International Week in January 2017. The week includes International Seminars targeted at Master's degree students and executive participants, International Research Seminars and a Pedagogical Innovation & TEL workshop with visiting professors and guest-speakers from international institutions.

1/ INTERNATIONAL SEMINARS | January 5-6 all day & 7 am or/and January 9-10 all day & 11 am, 2017

The International Seminars are open to Master's degree students in their first and second year. They are also targeted at executive participants. They may be taught in English, Spanish, Italian or German by guest speakers and visiting professors from international institutions.

OBJECTIVES:

The International Seminars aim to provide students with an international and cross-cultural approach on in-depth and capstone subjects. Courses may be either specialized subjects with a specific international focus or on a particular geographical area or cross-specialization subjects. Courses may address issues such as Business Ethics, Conflict Resolution, Project Management, Leadership, Management of Diversities, Management & Humanities...

Courses should be interactive, based on class discussions and case studies.

Structure:

Each seminar will consist of 18 hours, from Thursday to Saturday morning for the first session and from Monday to Wednesday morning for the second. Students are assessed at the end of the courses. Applicants may apply to teach for one or both seminar sessions.

Participants:

Each seminar group is made up of French and international students, coming from the different Masters' degree programs at iaelyon, as well as executive participants.

Students who participate in the International Seminars have a good written and spoken command of the chosen foreign language.
